It's not all about me..... but.....

- Experience with dual enrollment on-site, on-campus, online in three disciplines

- A COVID parent (that means a lot!), former high school teacher, and dual enrollment instructor

- Taught on-site at eight different high school campuses in Bevill's service area since Spring 2014

Dual Enrollment Pre-COVID

- On-site: Instruction provided at local high school
- On-campus: Students come to college campus
- Online: Encompasses any form of virtual delivery

Characteristics of Pre-COVID Dual Enrollment Students

- They required more management than the typical college student.

- They were young and all that entailed.

- They were familiar with an online environment, but not necessarily online education.

Characteristics of Pre-COVID Dual Enrollment Students

- They were high school students, too. This was especially a factor with on-site classes.

- They had parents. For example, parents (and some high school administrators) were caught off guard by FERPA.

- They were a mixed bag of tricks.

Dual Enrollment Post-COVID

MORE!!!

- On-site: Delivery at local high school
- On-campus: Students come to college campus
- Online: Any form of virtual delivery

Characteristics of Post-COVID Dual Enrollment Students

➤ They require even more management than before.

➤ They are younger!

➤ They were familiar with an online instruction, but much of it was not good.

Characteristics of Post-COVID Dual Enrollment Students

➤ They are still high school students. This is even more significant with increases in on-site classes.

➤ They still have parents. But with increased enrollment, statistically there will be more parents with limited or no college background.

➤ They are even more mixed up than before.

COVID forever changed the American educational landscape.

Dual enrollment for the foreseeable future is going to be a significant factor in higher education.

Learn from the trenches!

The intersection COVID's effects and expanding dual enrollment will require constant adaption.

➤ It's not all about me..... What are your experiences with dual enrollment?
